Hollywood Chinese: The Arthur Dong Collection Exhibition / October 23, 2009 – May 31, 2010

Hollywood Chinese: The Arthur Dong Documentary Collection presents selections from over 800 pieces of movie memorabilia that was collected during the ten-year research for Arthur Dong's groundbreaking film, Hollywood Chinese. Through posters, lobby cards, film stills, and scripts and documents dating from 1912, visitors journey into a vivid and graphic study of how Chinese have been imagined in the movies, reflecting the social and cultural history of the Chinese in America during the last century.

In addition to iconic depictions evidenced by material from films such as The Good Earth, The Vengeance of Fu Manchu, Charlie Chan in Honolulu, and Flower Drum Song, highlights of the collection include the surviving archive of pioneer Chinese American filmmaker James B. Leong, who produced the 1921 film, Lotus Blossom, in Los Angeles.

Filmmaker Arthur Dong is the Guest Curator for this exhibition.

Indian Miniature Painting
February 24 – May 16, 2010
In the Focus Gallery

As a companion exhibition to Beyond the Page: Contemporary Pakistani Art, the museum will display a range of classical miniature painting from its collection to connect visitors to this centuries-old artistic tradition in South Asia. The exhibition will focus on three genres in miniatures, Power, Pantheon and Portraiture, depicting images of rulers, deities and individuals. The conversation between these classical examples and the contemporary manifestations in Beyond the Page will engender a more complete understanding of the continuum between tradition and contemporary culture.

Japan in Blue and White

March 25, 2010 – March 6, 2011

In the Frank and Toshie Mosher Gallery of Japanese Art

In Japan, the pairing of blue and white has resulted in some of the most dramatic and uniquely Japanese designs. Indigo blue dye has been used to embellish textiles for centuries, while the mineral cobalt oxide has been used since the 17th century as an underglaze pigment on ceramics. In the early 19th century, a third blue pigment, Prussian blue, was imported from Europe and was so popular that it gave rise to a type of woodblock print known as aizuri-e, or "pictures printed in blue." These three blue pigments were originally employed for practical reasons – indigo dye repelled mosquitoes, cobalt oxide is one of the most stable underglaze ceramic pigments, and Prussian blue was colorfast. Mainly drawn from the Museum's collection, the exhibition will focus on blue and white ceramics, textiles and woodblock prints to illustrate the history of three blue pigments and their development in Japan.

The Political Impact of New Media in China

A talk by ANNE-MARIE BRADY (University of Canterbury)

Thursday, April 01, 2010

4:00 PM - 5:30 PM

10383 Bunche Hall

UCLA

Los Angeles, CA 90095

China, like many other governments, has recognized that new media are both a useful tool of government and a threat to state interests. Instead of fearing the new media, the Chinese party-state has embraced new technologies and forms of communication, utilizing them as new mediums for governance and integrating them into China's modern economy. At the same time it has worked to limit their negative potential. This talk examines the impact of the continuing evolution of new media on governance in China as well as elite political dynamics. It considers how the use of new media is changing perspectives of upcoming leaders, and how the political expectations of an increasingly wired, tech-savvy, and globally aware Chinese population are also being affected by the potential of the new technology.

Anne-Marie Brady is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Canterbury, in Christchurch. She is a specialist in China's domestic and foreign policy. She is the author of Friend of China: The Myth of Rewi Alley (RoutledgeCurzon, 2002); Making the Foreign Serve China: Managing Foreigners in the People's Republic (Rowman and Littlefield, 2003); Marketing Dictatorship: Propaganda and Thought Work in Contemporary China (Rowman and Littlefield, 2008); and the editor of Looking North, Looking South: China, Taiwan, and the South Pacific (World Scientific, forthcoming 2010); Foreign Missionary on the Long March: The Unpublished Memoirs of Arnolis Hayman (Merwin Press, forthcoming 2010); as well as numerous scholarly articles. Her current research topics include China's modernized propaganda system, the politics of ethnicity in China, and China's polar interests.

Honorable Survivor: Mao's China, McCarthy's America, and the Persecution of John S. Service

LYNNE JOINER discusses her new book

Friday, April 02, 2010

4:00 PM - 5:30 PM

10383 Bunche Hall

UCLA

Los Angeles, CA 90095

Journalist, documentary filmmaker, and author Lynne Joiner will discuss her new book, Honorable Survivor: Mao's China, McCarthy's America, and the Persecution of John S. Service and weave the diplomat's remarkable story into the fabric of watershed moments in 20th century history:

- the struggle between the Communists and Nationalists in wartime China and outbreak of renewed civil war which Service predicted
- the tangled US-China relationship during World War II
- the madness gripping the U.S. during the 1950s' anti-Communist hysteria --and Service's role as McCarthy's first victim
- the US-China rapprochement after Nixon and Mao's historic handshake
- and pertinent lessons for the foreign policy and civil rights challenges facing

America today

Joiner's talk will be punctuated by a slide presentation of rare photographs--from Service's childhood in Sichuan and his secret meetings with Mao Zedong in Yan'an --to his loyalty hearings and persecution at the hands of the FBI's J. Edgar Hoover and Senator Joseph McCarthy.

HONORABLE SURVIVOR grew out of Lynne Joiner's lifelong interest in China. A seasoned journalist with over twenty-five years' experience with some of the country's major news organizations, Joiner was the only American correspondent in China in 1976 when Premier Zhou Enlai died, an historic event that marked the passing of the revolutionary generation.

Lynne Joiner holds an M.F.A. degree in broadcast journalism from UCLA and received her B.A. in English Literature from Cornell University. She also attended Stanford University's Graduate School of Education and the Taipei Language Institute. She speaks what she calls "survival" Chinese and French.

"Joymoti" film screening

A film screening of Joymoti, the first Assamese feature film with discussion by Professor Aparna Sharma, Department of World Arts and Cultures.

Wednesday, April 28, 2010

6:00 PM - 8:00 PM

Kaufman Room 101

Los Angeles, CA 90095

'Joymoti' is considered by many film historians as the first Assamese feature film. The film was lost for many years after its release in 1935. A few years back, filmmaker, historian and critic Altaf Mazid found some reels and undertook restoration of the film.

This screening presents this restored version. Joymoti was made by prominent Assamese cultural nationalist, Jyotiprasad Aggarwala and focuses on the 17th century Assamese princess, Joymoti who lost her life in order to secure the future of the Assamese kingdom that was in throes of turmoil.

The film was shot entirely in Assam and is striking in its use of outdoor locations and set design that uses principles of vernacular architecture and folk material culture. Joymoti arose in the context of regional cinema and is distinct in its mode of production and aesthetic from the popular mythological films at that time being developed in the Mumbai film studios. It inaugurated Assamese cinema and offered a powerful alternative focussing on a woman figure as opposed to the popular mythological films of that time that largely centered on male figures.

The screening will be accompanied by a talk by Professor Aparna Sharma discussing the historical relevance of 'Joymoti.' Audience is advised the version of the film being screened does not include all reels of the film and its full soundtrack.

About the speaker:

Professor Aparna Sharma is a filmmaker and film theorist. Her research is practice-based and focuses on issues surrounding the representation of cultures. Professor Sharma makes films on communities displaced within the mainstream national imagination of India such as the Indian diaspora and the widows of Vrindavan. Recently she has commenced a new documentary project examining the cultural landscapes and folklore of India's north-eastern state, Assam. At the Department of World Arts and Cultures, she teaches video production combining practical training with specific theoretical inputs.

March 27 Shibori Class with Shibori Girl

1PM

This half day workshop will introduce you to three basic traditional shibori techniques- makiage (stitched and bound), itajime (fold and clamp), and arashi (pole wrapped) shibori on silk. Traditional and contemporary samples from my collection will be on hand for observation as well as many favorite books on the subject from my library.

Using a non-toxic cold water dye for silk that needs no chemicals or heat to set the dye, we will concentrate on applying these techniques in inventive ways that will inspire you to further study of this creative form of surface design. All these techniques can be applied to fabrics other than silk (cotton, linen, etc.) in addition to dyes of all kinds.

Discharge work will be discussed but not attempted due to the limitations of the workspace.

This class is for beginners and beyond, the inventive nature of shibori allowing for practitioners of all levels to learn, create, and be inspired.

This is a hands on class- please wear studio attire.

Materials student should bring to class include: small scissors, seam ripper, thimble (if desired), and a notebook for jotting down any information you deem important. Minimal handouts will be provided.

$35 members; $40 non-members, an additional $25 materials fee (cash only) will be collected at the beginning of class, admission is included. RSVP early, 25 students max. For more information about Shibori Girl or to see some of her work, go to
